1)

   If our Singleton object is calling Clone without overriding it, it throws an exception. And if we override it, the clones our object successfully into a second distinct object

2)

   Override the clone method and throw CloneNotSupportedException

3)

   It leads to the creation of another singleton object